CHARLES H. LYNCH

for Robert Hayden*

at Cathedral Church of St. John The Divine  The Poets’ Corner bay his stone plaque ensconced among ascendant neighbors: Hawthorne contiguous above stage left, Poe Emily Elizabeth Dickinson skirting right Twain smack-dab below tan panda  coffee mugger  confiding, gentle man birth claim: Asa Bundy Sheffey (of Paradise Valley, Detroit) alas, alien alias (Robert Hayden) among Earth works’ trustees oiled, crumpy hair  button-down  striped bow tie suspended paunch  stiff, uncreased blue jeans sloped shoulders serape-draped in Hotel Chelsea drafts gladly treats me, delving doctoral candidate clasps menu three inches from face squints, lenses flat loupes steers chopsticks’ snaps after wanton soup noodles

Bob’s keen hear holds elders natchal talk mimics folksy quotes  whimsy about thin dime times per his poems (and tendered mine), precise interpretive advice: scrub blurry words  prism cinematically in rhythm limn worn masks to marquee character rueful grimace  behind gender’s seductively flimsy scrims hint taboo in parables of guilt, temptation, regret forehead clutch  blanching  confesses quandary weighs career tact facts sallies into reputations

Black-tracked by Caucasian persuasion’s poetry cliques frown smirk splays palm on table to stress a point prickly about dim versifiers spot-lit—and critics’ canon fodder catches himself stokes briar pipe purses lips then, anecdotal poke fun jowly owl’s guttural guggle what I liked about him most? . . . candid, jovial, funkily avuncular (and, eighteen years later, gate ajar to my Declaration): laud Baha’u’llah Baha’i unifier supreme Peace Teacher with pensword honing deft anger with love, chronicled Afrogenic caravansary incised coal flow to furnace “lessons of our blood” until that wintry Michigan Monday his great heart closed

*Robert Hayden (1913-1980) was an American poet, essayist, educator and Bahá’í. He was the first African-American to serve as Consultant in Poetry to the Library of Congress, a role today known as Poet Laureate of the United States.
